

About the Author

Russell Guého first visited the Kimberley in 1979 when he was en route to the Northern Territory to work on the Douglas Daly Research Station as a Farmhand/Jackeroo. Returning in 1989 as the East Kimberley District Wildlife Officer, he has lived and worked in the region for almost 15 years. From government service to operating his own nature-based tour business providing specialist guiding services to a variety of land and marine based operators, Russell has always had a passion for the Kimberley. These days he shares his knowledge and love of the land with students enrolled at the Kimberley College of TAFE where he is involved with developing Cultural (Lifestyle) Tourism training for Aboriginal people in the region. “Icons of the Kimberley” is the result of half a lifetime of incredible experiences – travelling through the Kimberley by land, sea and air. Managing wildlife populations, catching poachers and forming long lasting friendships with a variety of Kimberley characters have all contributed to the information within this book. The message that promotes sustainability has developed from a deep respect for the land and the desire for these types of experiences to be available to future generations.
